alien adventure. Satire on humanity's superiority combines real-life events, science fiction/fantasy and musical elements. The film is produced by the Czech company Studio Zvon and co-produced by Universal Production Partners and Studio Bystrouška with the support of the MEDIA programme and the State Fund of Cinematography. The organizers also presented a selection of new projects in development: drama about Czechoslovakia 1975, Agnes and Andrej Tomasz Wiński; Adam Sedláč's Domesticque [+see also: film review profile: Profile of Adam Farmer]; Dan Włodarczyk social drama about illegal mining, Green Horse Rustlers; The tragic death of Ondřej Provozník in Russia, a film that will be shot at 16 mm and will have only one copy, so that once it is damaged, it will be gone forever; and screenwriter and director Taťána Rubášová tribute to black and white photography, biographical drama My Sudek, scheduled for 2018. Finally, experienced filmmaker Juraj Herz is preparing the psychological thriller Forever With You, and legendary Slovak director Juraj Jakubisko already has two projects in development: the fairy tale Seven-Legged Lukas and the historical drama Forgotten Epic. Page 2029/04/2015 - Film by Stefan Schwieter, Swiss director of German origin, which takes us into a subversive universe with a highly refreshing punk feel|With the prestigious Sister d'argent SRG SSR for best Swiss film at the recent Visions du Réel festival (where he competed in the International Competition for Feature Film), Stefan Schwieter's latest film shows us that his fame as a documentary filmmaker specialized in music is justified and that his talent is always evolving new and surprising pages. Bill Drummond, star of Imagine Waking Up Tomorrow and All Music Has Disappeared [+see also: trailerfilm profile], lives up to his own rules and is a true icon of the British punk scene (singer in legendary band Big in Japan). An anarchist at heart, he is always looking for new conventions to break down and turn on his head in the name of the untouchable Do It Yourself motto. He had (and then sacrificed) his moment of glory with the KLF's acid project, which pushed him to that extreme, in keeping with his revolutionary ideals, and burned a million pounds. After this highly controversial performance, Bill Drummond returns to the stage with the musical project '17', a truly anti-current concept that leads us to reflect on what would happen if music were to suddenly disappear from the face of the earth. (Article continues below - Business information)
Stefan Schwieter follows Drummond his camera, traveling around the vast British countryside in search of new voices for his choir project. The aim of our Scottish musician is to create a whole new musical composition, just as Schwieter is trying to make a documentary about a transient utopian musical experience. Drummond is eager to protect, through his project '17', the magic of music from mainstream greed. The compositions of this unusual choir are condensed fragments of life, insights into the diversity of society on the verge of exploding through music. Drummond and Schwieter try, each in their own way, to explore the as yet unknown side of human beings through the magic of artistic expression, through music and film. Theirs is a dramatic and emotional journey that transcends its subject matter, to do a unique, transient something that could be called art. With his documentaries, Schwieter tries to shift behind what already exists, leading the viewer into a world where images emotionally translate people's words. With Stefan Schwieter's gaze, Bill Drummond leads us into true humanity, far from the glossy image of pastoral and fashionable Great Britain, where everything seems easy, artificially so. The complex nature of this extremely stratified society is captured by a Swiss filmmaker with a rare clarity of thought and sincerity. His camera accompanies Drummond from coast to coast, picking up unspoken moments in which reality turns into something sublime. The sounds are intense and the images move unexpectedly with the music of the everyday, as if trying to combine together to create a whole new symphony. The magic of the film is made available to music, which becomes the protagonist, but also its guiding spirit, its very essence. Schwieter's latest documentary captures the deep inner self of a mysterious character who does not compromise, highlighting his strengths, but also and above all his weaknesses. Psychoanalysis through a film that takes the viewer far. (Translated from Italian)Page 2129/04/2015 - Shellac delivers darnier maniver's feature debut in the face of some French heavyweight comedies, and films By Andersson. Vogt and Ricciarelli| Young poet Damien Manivel|Having bagged special recognition in Locarno in the section Filmmakers present and screened at such festivals as Rotterdam (Bright Future), Montreal, Premiers Plans in Angers, Katowice, Murcia and Montevideo, a young poet [+ see also: trailerfilm profile] Damien Manivel today continues his adventure in French theaters, distributed by Shellac over 13 screens, a modest press run reinforced by a strong dose of approval from critics. (Article continues below - Business information)
After turning a lot with his short films, notably La dame au chien (winner of the Jean Vigo Award 2011) and Un dimanche matin (Discovery Prize in the Critics' Week at Cannes in 2012), Damien Manivel successfully negotiated his transition to features with a sunny, off-the-wall and often absurd film, hiding some wonderfully promising elements in addition to his rather subtle central theme. And the story? Barely from his teens, Rémi (Rémi Taffanel) dream of becoming a poet and enchanting the world with his deeply moving and memorable verses. In search of inspiration, under the hot sun, and armed with nothing but a biro and a laptop, Rémi is determined to write his poem... But where to start? Do you spend ages staring at the sea? Climb the top of a mountain? Do you listen to birds sing? Heading to the library? Find his muse? In a bar? In the cemetery? Underwater?... The film has a comic side; I have highlighted some clichés about the character of a poet, and we are nowhere near realism in terms of character or setting, explains Manivel. More than poetry, the film talks about our enthusiasm, our dreams, our difficulties in expressing ourselves and growing up. The character encounters a lot of obstacles. There is no animosity against him, but rather a lack of answers from the world. A film older than ten days, the young poet was produced by the director himself, with his company MLD Films. With this film and another French feature debut on an unusual theme (Tournament [+see also: trailerinterview: Lou de Laâge|film profile] by Elodie Namer - read the article - Diaphana Distribution in 42 theaters), then comes a huge contrast with the two national com Eloïse Lang and Noémie Saglio (distributed by Gaumont in approximately 290 cinemas) and Nose femmes [+see also] Eloïse Lang and Noémie Saglio (distributed by Gaumont in approximately 290 cinemas) and Nose femmes [+see also : trailer film profile], and starring Richard Berry (who is associated with the cast members Daniel Auteuil and Thierry Lhermitte - Mars Distribution over 457 screens). As luck would have it, the film is released a week after L'Année Prochaine [+see also: film review|trailerfilm profile] Vania Letourcq, another first feature film by a young Belgian filmmaker who depends on the agonore of adolescence, assembly problems, and the search for identity. Paul, in his forties, returns to Brussels after being in exile for several years. He'd like to get back to where he left off, and better yet, make things right. For starters, he'd like to get back in touch with his biological daughter Dorothy, whom he's never met and raised by another. Dorothy is fifteen years old, almost sixteen, and lives in the resentments of brussels society, which has always looked down on Paul. His brief and indirect relationship with Christine was never really accepted by her family either. A private detective working in a civil society, he gives his skills to use for his own purposes, tracking Dorothy from adi distance. Of course, his monitoring activity quickly noticed him, and a young girl who is alone, looking for her biological father, about whom she knows nothing, gets close to him, eventually asking him to help her find her father. Paul plays Bouli Lannors, who injects the warmth of injected melancholy into the character. Soon we will see Lanners in two other Belgian films: Je suis mort mais j'ai des amis [+see also: film review|trailerinterview: Guillaume and Stéphane Mala... film profile] of the Malandrin brothers landing in theatres on 27. Acting opposite him is Manon Capelle, a new face supported by Aisleen McAfferay, who plays her best friend Claire in the film) who brings freshness to a role that works well. Christine is Anne Coensens, she plays a woman in a state of confusion, not so far from her character in L'Année Prochaine. The film is produced by Taranthula, which confirms his interest in working on debut Belgian films, after Mobile Home [+ see also: trailerfilm profile] (François Pirot), Pelada [+ see also: trailerfilm profile] (Damien Chemin), and soon-to-be-released Baden, Baden Rachel Lang, co-produced with funding from CCA and Wallimage. All Cats Are Grey is distributed in Belgium by O'Brother and internationally sold by a new international sales company based in Brussels, Be for Films. In close cooperation with the festival, EFP will present young directors and their films – all Czech premieres – to the public, the film industry and the press during the three-day event, which runs from 5 to 7 July. As young European directors play an increasingly important role in the ongoing revitalisation of European cinema, we are very interested in supporting them, says Martin Schweighofer, Vice-President and Executive Director of the EFP at the Austrian Film Commission. (Article continues below - Business information)
Participants were nominated by member organisations for employee financial participation according to artistic quality, content and international attractiveness, with the final selection made by KVIFF. This new initiative, which aims to raise awareness of new, pioneering European cinema and promising directorial talent, is supported by the Creative Europe – Media programme of the European Union and the relevant Member Organisations of the Tax Office. Selected directors will present their films on the busiest days of the festival. Networking events with flagging producers, distributors and sales representatives, a master class led by a renowned filmmaker and a panel discussion involving representatives of film schools will provide opportunities to establish valuable international business contacts. Films presented by their directors in Future Frames: Patrick Vollrath - Everything Will Be Okay (Filmakademie Wien, Austrian Film Commission, Austria) Raphael Crombez - Perditiön County (LUCA School of Arts, Flanders Image, Belgium) Ondřej Hudeček – Peacock (FAMU – Film and Television School of Performing Arts, Czech Film Centre, Czech Republic) Konstantina Kotzamani - Washingtonia (Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greek Film Centre, Greece) Mátýás Szabó - Hranice (Budapest University of Drama and Film, Magyar Filmunió, Hungary) James Fitzgerald - Skunky (Institute of Arts, Design and Technology, Irish Film Board, Ireland) Halfdan Ullmann Tøndel - Birdheart (Westerdals, Film and TV, Norwegian Film Institute, Norway) Martina Buchelova - Green Line (Film and Television Faculty - Academy of Performing Arts Bratislava, Slovak Film Institute, Slovak Institute) Jerry Carlsson - Everything we share (Akademin Valand Gothenburg University, Swedish Film Institute, Sweden) Moira Pitteloud - Offer (Filmschule HEAD Genève, Swiss Films, Switzerland)

Page 2429/04/2015 - In intimate and documentary style, German filmmaker Stefan Butz mühlen follows a young man trying to find himself aboard an island-bound cargo ship that he longs for|Martin sznur in Radiant Sea|Stories about the journeys always (or almost always) to work on two levels: the movement from one point to another is not only carried out on the surface of the Earth, but is accompanied by a similar movement – in this case, one under the surface of the skin. In The Shining Sea [+see also: trailerfilm profile], young German director Stefan Butz mühlen displays one of these journeys, across the sea, an element in constant motion that serves as the perfect accompaniment to this personal movement. The film, which was presented as a world premiere at the Crossing Europe festival in Linz, follows a young man on this journey. (Article continues below - Business information)
Marek (Martin Sznur) flees his parents' cold farm in Western Pomerse to move to brighter climates: the sun's rays first take him to Dunkirk and then to Saint-Nazaire, where he boards a cargo ship with Frenchman Jean (Jules Léo Sagot). Marek discovers a new horizon in Jean's skin: one in which love and passion are inundated into the existential void he is trying to fill. Intimate and sexual encounters on the open sea immerse two characters in an odyssey, at the end of which they find the island they desire together... or maybe not. The two sailors will once again step on firm ground when the ship arrives on the island of Martinique. However, even if they both now find themselves in the same outer place, everyone is trying to keep themselves afloat in their own inner space. It is the most inland nature of the universe that Radiant Sea emphasizes in its mission-en-scène, using the natural sites of the Atlantic and Caribbean islands, because it supports them from the role of mere scenery. Butzmühlen builds the film on two parallel levels. The first is a portrait of the intimacy that exists between Mark and Jean, sketched out by the obvious gaze and the energetic sex scenes between them. And the second is the documentary view of the world that surrounds them: the hierarchy of workers on the cargo ship is presented in the finest detail, the work on the cargo ship is captured in long sequences, Madama Butterfly, which serves as the soundtrack, and the natural environment of Martinique leave us with captivating images such as a night walk dotted with countless fireflies. Dubbing (Mark) becomes another of the film's instruments as it narrates the interaction between the two men while they are silent, contributing to that documentary-like feeling. And while the shining sea might be stronger in its mission-en-scène, as in its story, Butzmühlen manages to portray an interesting journey brimming with untouched sincerity. The film was produced by German outfit Salzgeber & Co, which was already behind the last title Butzmühlen, Sleepless Knights, filmed in Spain and co-director with its now editor Cristina Diz. International sales are dealt with by the production company itself. (Article continues below - Business information)

The event will host a delegation comprising approximately 40 Latin American funds, businesses and production companies, including ptp's new partners - Argentina's main film and media institute INCAA and Mexico's IMCINE Film Institute. (Article continues below - Business information)
PtP chief executive Liz Rosenthal said: 'With the generous support of the British Council, we are delighted to be enabling new partnerships and international collaboration between Latin American companies and the huge range of media companies participating in Power to the Pixel: The Cross-Media Forum. Caroline Meaby, senior programme manager with the British Council's creative economics team, said: 'Latin America is a region absolutely teeming with creative energy, so we are extremely happy to support the delegation of 16 media innovators who will take part in Power to the Pixel: The Cross-Media Forum in October. Exciting things are happening across the continent and we want to help create new links between digital storytellers and leading lights in creative industries from both sides of the Atlantic. We believe that the promotion of creative talent will prosper, will lead to wider cultural and economic benefits for the region. (The article continues below - Business information)
Page 2630/04/2015 - Serbian festival hit won the main prize in Wiesbaden, while slovak docu-fiction hybrid won the fipresci and the prize for best director Vimes 15 ©. Someone's child [+see also: film review|trailerfilm profile], won the Grand Prix at the 15th goEast - Festival of Central and Eastern European Film in Wiesbaden (April 22-28). This is also the 15th award for Serbian-Croatian co-production since its world premiere at last year's Venetian Critics Week - where it was voted the spectator favourite. (Article continues below - Business information)
The €10,000 prize was awarded by a jury headed by Pavel Strnad and includes Anja Antonowicz, Bernd Buder, Marian Crişan and Ines Tanović, who were impressed by the film, which caught the audience's attention with a powerful story about a boy who transformed from an animal into a human being while the world around him went in the opposite direction. Ivan Ostrochovsky's won the Wiesbaden City Prize for Best Director (€7,500) for Goat [+see also: film review profile: Ivan Ostrochovsky|film], which had its world premiere at the Berlinale Forum and recently won two prizes at the Vilnius Kino Pavasaris International Film Festival. Goat also won the FIPRESCI award from a jury composed of film critics Ingrid Beerbaum, Jean-Max Méjean and Andrey Plakhov. The Federal Ministry of Foreign Affairs award for cultural diversity worth 4,000 euros was awarded to the film Logbook, Serbistan of experienced Serbian director Željmir Žilnik. The documentary about asylum seekers from Africa and the Middle East who end up in Serbia en route to the European Union premiered at zagrebDox this year. goEast Jury also highlighted two documentaries with honorable mentions: Hungarian director Gábor Horcher's Rogue, for showing a character trying to get his life back into play, and My Home by Jiri Stejskal from the Czech Republic, for capturing the long-term struggle of a family fighting for a dignified life. Sita Scherer's four-minute prize in experimental film and video art won the Open Frame Award in the competition for experimental film and video art, along with a €5,000 prize funded by the BHF-BANK Foundation. The jury consisted of Inke Arns, Fabian Schöneich and Florian Wüst. The goEast Development Award (€3,500) for best pitch in the context of the East-West Talent Lab went to the concept project for Messenger by Romanian director Andra Puşcas from a jury comprising Jelena Goldbach, Susann Maria Hempel and Meinof Zurlhorst. Thematically, the 15th edition of goEast was heavily influenced by the war in Ukraine. Filming in times of war was one of the main themes of this year's festival, which was particularly evident in the beyond belonging selection program. We are very happy with how many people have come out, and we see the continued interest that our festival – and with it Central European cinema – still enjoys. For seven full days, Wiesbaden's heart beats for goEast, noted festival director Gaby Babic about a reported 11,450 visitors. (The article continues below Business information)
